How reading can help:

Making connections

A regular routine of reading together in a relaxed environment can increase a child's trust in your availability and your interest in them.

By understanding and responding to a child's cues during story time, you are helping a child learn about communication and building relationships now and in the future.

Independent learning

Reading time involves attention, listening, talking, understanding, turn taking and sharing all of which are the foundations of language development and learning.

Reading also sparks your child's imagination and stimulates their curiosity, creating further opportunities for learning.

Understanding difference

Through reading books, we can learn that we are not alone.

Books about different kinds of families, and people with different kinds of strengths and challenges, can help us to better understand and respect ourselves and one another.

Starting conversations

Reading for pleasure together with a child allows them to explore the world in a safe environment, through the eyes of the story book characters, creating opportunities for spontaneous conversations without the need for direct questions

Where is the Den?

The Den is permanently available at Chelmsley Wood library. Books can be reserved at all Solihull libraries and requested online for free for collection at Chelmsley Wood or any other Solihull library.
